

I live in a small state with few radio stations. Before satellite radio if I wanted news I had to listen to radio a radio station owned by a big corporation based in Texas that had a clear right wing agenda (this theory based on programming that only has five radio talk shows that are hosted by people who offer up their right wing opinions not facts or news by their own confessions). Delaware with 2 Democratic Senators, a Democratic Governor and an a majority that voted for the Democratic nominee for president. There was no choice offered. Satellite radio provides choice and that is an example of American freedom. If satellite radio is hurting Clear Channel's profits. It's because Americans are voting for an alternative.
